Certified Public Accountant

Course Benefits

Recognition. There really is no arguing that CPA is the title most people associate with the accounting industry in general. Therefore, a CPA designation on your resume will be noticed immediately.

Career security. Over the last several years there has been a shortage of professional accountants entering the market. This means someone with a CPA is far more likely to retain a position than someone without.

Earning potential. Money isn't everything but it is certainly essential to a successful career. A CPA earns 10% more than their non-certified professional counterpart. You may also have access to additional benefits

Job satisfaction. A CPA isn't pigeonholed in just one aspect of accounting. They have experience in conducting audits, consulting, information technology, financial reporting, taxes and many other aspects of the industry.

Career development. For an entry level accounting professional
